Advice to Brides

Keep your hands soft and lovely! You can even if you do all your own work—a new idea in household soap. Pure soap!

When a girl loses hand beauty she loses half her charm.

Ugly rough hands are unnecessary. They are without excuse.

Yet 3 housewives in 4 have them—hands that tell kitchen secrets.

Why

Strong laundry soaps used for dishwashing, for household cleaning, are the reason.

Most contain 25% to 40% adulterant. Of 28 popular brands recently tested 27 were thus treated!

Soak your pretty hands in strong suds. And there can be but one answer.

Now a Gentle Way

As world's experts in beauty, we have developed a new idea in a household soap.

EXHIBITS AT JEFF FAIR BEST EVER

County Show Held on Hand; Educational Features Are Strong.

Jefferson-Jefferson county fair exhibits are bigger and better than ever, according to County Agent J. M. Corner. The livestock and poultry departments are especially fine and surpass those of any previous year. Farm and garden products are exceptionally good.

The Jefferson county show held in charge of A. D. Garke, secretary of the Holstein Breeders' association, is exhibiting. This herd is taking in a big circuit, including two state fairs, Waterloo Dairy Congress and the National Dairy Show. The Guernsey show herd, in charge of J. C. Rawison, Fort Atkinson, is back from a long circuit in Wisconsin and Iowa, and is on exhibit.

Officers, members and testers of the Fort Atkinson Cow Testing association are holding an exhibition of 10 Holsteins and Guernseys, with a record, ranging from 362 to 488 pounds of butter fat per year. Visitors are entertained with music. The women of the association will serve a dairy luncheon, with a "milk lady" in connection. The lunch will consist principally of dairy products. Clarence Brugg, Fort Atkinson, is doing regular testing each day, and tests give samples brought in by farmers.

The educational exhibit in Jefferson county has outgrown the regular educational building space. Secretary C. E. Roessler has given County Superintendent A. J. Thorne charge of the large industrial building at the fair, and it is filled with fine school booth exhibits, the best in the state. The idea of a school booth exhibit originated at the Jefferson county fair, and was carried from there to the state fair. There are 20 booths in this building. Every booth except two carries an agricultural effect and all have regular school work in them. Nearly all sections of the county are represented. This special building will be open to the public Thursday night.

There also is a large apple exhibit in this building, by the Jefferson County Apple Spraying association. About 100 bushels of apples, mostly wealthies, are shown. The association offers $165 in prizes for the best apples. These apples will be judged on their commercial value, of variety, quality and uniformity.

The other educational building is crowded with regular educational work.

What Will We Do With the State Fair?

Year after year, with here and there an exception, we have the chilling information that the state fair is in debt and that a deficit of several thousand dollars will have to be made up by taxation. This year it runs into nearly sixty thousand dollars. It is time to seriously consider the abandonment of the fair as it is now conducted. The Gazette makes this statement too, with the full knowledge of tradition, since the first state fair was held at Janesville. Other fairs were also held here when the state fair was being passed around among those cities desirous of gambling on the receipts and no deficit was made up by the taxpayers.

In order to arrive at a conclusion as to the definite future of the fair it might be well to go over the books and see the separate items of cost and maintenance and note what items have most contributed to the deficit. As it is now the fair is divided into three main sections: 1—the exhibits, including live stock; 2—the attractions, side shows, the outdoor free exhibits, carnival features or spectacles like the India pageant of this year, and 3—the concessions.

So far as the money appropriated by the state is concerned and the reason why the fair is held, is answered by the first section—exhibits. The show part is added more for the entertainment of Milwaukee and others from the larger cities who care little for the exhibits, the development of the live stock interests of the state or whether butter, cheese, or tobacco is produced in Wisconsin.

The interests which make the state of Wisconsin paramountly a leader in the nation of agriculture, are dairying and live stock. Instead of a fair with a lot of shows heretofore cheap and lawdry, with features of the ordinary summer garden or beach as a side attraction, it might be that the taxpayers of the state would be justified in holding a state fair wherein genuine agriculture would receive first consideration. It is possible for Wisconsin to have a great dairy show—to exhibit at that show our livestock, in which we lead all other states of the union in dairy cattle, number and value, and products of the dairy and the dairy farm. With this could also be combined the potato show and farm products outside of dairying.

But to go on, year after year, loading up the taxpayers with a burden of deficit seems to be neither good business nor does it get us anywhere except to add more debt. There might have been a time when people annually went to a state fair or a local fair with the idea of being entertained and amused once a year. It was the grand and glorious event of a drab 365 days. But we do not now have to go to Milwaukee to see shows, hear good bands, see a few balls rolled on a board to an elusive landing place, watch young people dance without caring much for decades, or witness fire works. We can get all these close to home.

We do, however, have a respect for the state in which we live and its story of production and leadership and we want to see gathered in one place annually the best in every locality for final arbitration as to that leadership.

We can, without apology, pay a deficit for a fair purely and wholly devoted to advertising the farm greatness of this state. We are not justified in paying taxes to make up a deficit for a heretofore circus, carnival and county fair under the name of Wisconsin.

It is about time we arose and declared ourselves on this phase of money-spending in the state. It is about time that the farmers of the state talked plainly about the annual deficit and found whether it was created by the worth-while exhibits or the expenses of the bright lights and circus stunts far removed from the original purpose of the fair.

"The "r" in September seems to stand for "row" with Mussolini and the world to be his oyster.

Reports from Iowa and Missouri show a large hog crop and other reports from larger cities also show a steady production of the street car species.

One of the largest assets and most valuable is Janesville's crop of children as told by the school attendance.

NEW FRUITS AND VEGETABLES

By FREDERICK J. HASKIN

Washington.—What would you think of a vegetable that may be used for soup, stuffed, stewed, fried, made into fritters, baked or lyonnaise, and that is a delectable salad when served with either French or mayonnaise dressing? Moreover, it is a vegetable that although shipped as early as October, its keeping qualities make it seasonable as late as March.

Such is the chayote, known in New Orleans among the Creoles as mililton. It has been brought into this country from Mexico and the West Indies and already is fairly familiar to people throughout the south and is finding its way to northern and western markets.

It is but one of numerous new foods that the government is constantly introducing to the people of the United States. Among his many and varied activities, Uncle Sam sends out agricultural explorers into the far and near corners of the earth to search for fruits and vegetables that he may introduce to his home-folks. Anything that the people of other countries find palatable and valuable is seized upon with the idea that it may be shipped into the United States, or possibly grown here, to the end that we may have a variety as well as an abundance of food, that the nation's living may be reduced and that broad acres of our soil now unproductive may be tilled with profit.

The chayote is regarded as especially valuable because it is always harder to vary the winter vegetable menu than the summer and it is believed that a new vegetable for this season can not but become popular. As a companion for that old stand-by, the potato, the chayote will be hard to beat.

The buy article has long been imported from Europe and is no novelty to those who are able to have what they want when they want it, but it is now rapidly becoming available to those of modest expenditures as it is grown in California and in the South. The business of shipping to northern and eastern markets has grown until this vegetable may be purchased in all large cities.

This vegetable belongs to the same big family that includes the dandelion, sunflower and squash. Indeed, when growing it resembles a giant dandelion. The body of the article is formed of fleshy, overlapping leaves, clustered closely around a heart that is not unlike the core of a cabbage in form. The possibilities of using this vegetable are limited only by the ingenuity of the cook, for it is good steamed, stuffed, made into soup, as a salad, used as an omelet filling or combined with scrambled eggs.

From the tropics where it is the principal food staple of millions of people, there has been brought to us a rival of the white potato—the dashen. In appearance it resembles somewhat both the potato and the sugar beet, and its food value is obvious when it is known that it contains half as much again protein and starch as the white potato. It is usually when cooked and has a rich chestnut flavor. It may be used in almost every way the white potato is used and in addition it may be candied like the sweet potato. It is also the epitome of a stuffing for the turkey. The dashen has one advantage in that it will grow in moist, hot and humid regions where its cousin, the white potato, would rot. It is no longer an experiment in the United States, as it has been found that it can be grown over a large area in the South and it has made its appearance in both southern and northern markets.

From Japan we have adapted an attractive branched vegetable called the udo which is a staple vegetable in that country. Once it was brought here only in cans for sale to Japanese residents, but now we are growing it in many sections of the country. It is adaptable to all the uses to which asparagus may be put, and is said to be superior to that vegetable in that its white shoots are edible to the very base without the least objectionable fiber.

Apartment dwellers will rejoice to learn of the pea, a Chinese celery, cabbage, which offers all the delights of our own cabbage and at the same time is free from the objectionable odor when cooking, that gives warning to those on the tenth floor whenever any neighbors below are having a boiled dinner. It is further claimed for this vegetable that it may be served in two forms at the same meal—as a vegetable and as a salad—and the two forms will not taste alike.

The mango, which has been called the apple of the tropics, is one of the most important fruits in the world and folks in all the larger cities of the United States are just learning that they may enjoy it as a Florida product. And the growers of Florida are discovering that they can not supply the demand for it. Another new Florida product is the papaya, a strange tropical fruit which is split open and eaten for its golden, custard-like pulp. It resembles the musk-melon in size and shape, and is credited with having remarkable qualities as a digestant.

And what Uncle Sam does not find just what he wants in the way of a fruit in foreign climes he gets busy and invents one. Such is the tangelo, which the department of agriculture has developed as a cross between the grapefruit and the tangerine. It has been called the "kid-glove grapefruit." It is between the two fruits in size, with the tangerine's loose skin and ease of separation into segments, and with a flavor like the grapefruit but sweeter.

Another invention is the citrange, in which the government experts believe they have given us a citrus fruit that may be grown as far north as New York. It is a cross between the Japanese navel orange and the Florida orange and is something like a small, flat orange. It is thick-skinned and juicier than a lemon, and is said that citrange is equal or preferable to lemonade. Excellent pies and preserves may be made of the citrange, and it may be used, as is the lemon, for general culinary purposes.

Perishables that are puckerless, of large size and delicate flavor, and that may be eaten when as hard as an apple, are another novelty to the United States, but cultivated so long in the Orient that their growing is an industry equal in importance to our apple or orange growing.

The government's efforts will go for naught if two groups of pioneers are not speedily developed—pioneer growers and pioneer consumers. If these new foods are as slow in winning public favor as, for example, the potato was in France, where the opposition was such that the government was petitioned to suppress its cultivation, or as the tomato was in England and the United States, where for many many years it was considered poisonous and called the "love apple," the experts of the agriculture department may become discouraged.

So the public generally is urged to try the new and strange fruits and vegetables whenever they are made available, and assurance is held out that the government is not boasting anything in the food line that has not been tried and found good.

If the League of Nations wants to preserve world peace let it organize a base ball league from the quarrelsome races.

Twenty-five hundred whippings have taken place in Oklahoma in the last year. That would probably be about the number applied to slaves back in the days before the Emancipation proclamation.

TEARING DOWN AND BUILDING UP.
 There is ever the tearing down
 And the building up again;
 There is nothing in city or town
 Man fashions long to remain.
 Better's a constant cry,
 Bigger's a constant call,
 And even beneath the sky
 We fling up our towers to fall.

The sound of the blast by day
 Shall deafen our puny speech,
 As the old to the new gives way
 And higher we strive to reach.
 What was but a year ago
 A glorious goal attained,
 We are turning from now to know
 The goal that shall soon be gained.

Shall ever we sit and see
 The last of our building done?
 Shall ever the morning be
 When there's no new dream begun?
 Not while men seek renown
 And a drop of life in the cup,
 Shall we pause in our tearing down
 Or halt in our building up.

For better's our constant cry
 And bigger's our constant call
 Both building and tearing down
 And changes come to us all.
 And the old shall give way to the new
 And the hammers of men shall ring
 So long as the skies are blue
 And the flowers bloom in the spring.

Who's Who Today

JEAN LOUIS MALVY.

Jean Louis Malvy, minister of justice for France at one time and exiled for five years because of the charge of betrayal of the nation's trust, has returned to France with hopes of once more coming into power and obtaining revenge against the men primarily responsible for his banishment.

Malvy was exiled by the French senate, sitting as a high court in 1917. He had been minister of war from the beginning of the great conflict until his trial began. As interior chief he was held responsible for the moral discipline of the nation. He was given unlimited powers in handling the treasonous intrigues and their leaders. Instead of doing his duty, he was accused of having been a traitor to the nation. He was given the honor of the senate. Malvy permitted unpatriotic movements, including the formidable "defeatist" program.

Malvy's return is welcomed by the left wing group in French politics. This group has been quietly at work lining up the support of all the opponents of the Clemenceau regime, in power at the time he was banished. Deniste plans to obtain Malvy's election to the chamber of deputies are under way, it is said.

By WILLIAM BRADY, M. D.
 Noted Physician and Author

THE GOOD OLD DAYS
 When people ate even the entire wheat instead of what now is the staff of life, and thereby they gained at least three blessings—vitamins, calcium, iron and iron in sufficient quantities.

The germs which our grandfathers or great grandfathers never heard of were on the job, nevertheless, and working far greater havoc than they do nowadays. These self-same microbes families or species were responsible for the frightfully high death rate among our ancestors. Who took their typhoid visitations as the inevitable handiwork of an inscrutable providence, charged diphtheria to the worst enemy of mankind, and attributed measles and consumption to the climate.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.
 Galvanized Iron Ware.
 The bureau of chemistry and department of agriculture recently issued a public warning against allowing food to stand even for a short time in galvanized iron vessels or in milk cans, because there is risk of fruit juices, because there is risk of not only imparting a disagreeable taste to the food, but of causing sudden illness from zinc poisoning.

Salts Versus Castor Oil.
 Do saline purge and a castor oil purge?
 1. Clean the alimentary canal.
 2. Draw water from the entire system equally.
 3. Effect the circulation equally.
 4. Work alike in a case of stomach fermentation or bowel fermentation?

Answer.—1. The purgative effects are about the same, although they do not clean the alimentary canal. 2. Salts draw water from the lining of the stomach and intestinal castor oil purges by reason of the irritation of the intestine. 3. The active principle of the oil, ricin, is the active principle of the salts. 4. The withdrawal of water by salts influences the blood volume temporarily. Castor oil has no appreciable effect on the circulation, except that it causes red blood corpuscles to appear in the stools.

One would do as little good as the other. Whether either should be taken would depend on what ails the individual and on other individual circumstances.

On the Other Sex.
 A week ago I went bathing on the second day of my menstruation. Since then several girls have told me I will probably never again consume. I have organic trouble all my life. The water was not cold, but I enjoyed the swim and was not tired nor blue afterward. (M. M.)

Answer.—Advise the girls to tell at the time, and enjoy the swimming whenever you feel so inclined.

Q. Can a postmaster charge 20 cents for registering a letter? I. W. H. A.

A. The Post Office Department issued on April 1st, 1923, the regulation that the fee for registering a letter is 20 cents. By this extension an indemnity may be claimed not exceeding $100. Before this new rule was put into effect the amount of indemnity claimed for lost registered letters was $50.00.

Q. Why do geysers erupt? H. B. C.

A. The investigations of Hunsen in the geyser region of Iceland, have been generally accepted by geologists as an explanation of the origin and activity of geysers. By seepage from the surface the geyser tube is filled with a volume of water, which at intervals erupts. The water is heated by lava flows or other volcanic sources. When the temperature in the lower part of the tube is raised, the water boils and the water boils in spite of the column above, a portion of the water is changed into steam and by expansion causes an eruption at the surface. This relieved of pressure, a large quantity of water flashes into the steam and ejects the whole column violently into the air. If the circulation of the water is impeded, the eruption can be hastened. Geysers in many cases were originally hot springs.

Q. What was the scheme whereby General Grant was swindled out of his money? C. B. V.

A. General Grant became the silent partner of the banking firm of Grant & Ward, 215 So. Second, and Frederick and Ferdinand Ward were the active partners. Through the disrepute of Ward, the Grant family was bankrupt. Ward's firm dominated the firm. He absorbed most of the capital and the firm had gradually developed by building and extending their tubes.

Q. How was the scheme whereby General Grant was swindled out of his money? C. B. V.

A. For the fiscal year ending April 1923, the British Administration of Palestine incurred a deficit of about $50,000.

More for Your Money

Swapping things—as when our grandmothers traded eggs for calico at the cross-roads store—gives a better understanding of values. By measuring one thing against another we too can often judge values more clearly.

Coal and wages make up more than half the manufacturing cost of cement.

The chart above shows price fluctuations for portland cement, coal and wages during the past ten years. In each case 100 is used to represent 1913 figures, by the Government departments which compiled these statistics.

Translated into "eggs and calico" language, this chart shows that a ton of coal would buy nearly twice as much cement in 1922 as in 1913. A day's wages also would buy more cement in 1922 than in 1913.

This means that even though coal and wages make up more than half its manufacturing cost, cement is now relatively lower in price than either coal or wages.

So, considering these increased costs, it is plain that in buying cement you get more for your money than before.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Edgar Quenton Bartholomew had two nephews, each named the same as a brother. One had been absent in Europe for a term of years, the other had been in the army. He returned to America to make his home with his uncle. Here he met another cousin, daughter of the uncle, with whom he had been in love only to learn that the other Edgar was understood to be an accepted suitor. This Edgar and the uncle quarreled. In this house there was a mystery in the main stairs, steps other than his own following the stairs as one walked and a breath of cold air blown on one from some mystery and unaccounted for. There was no love lost between the two male cousins and it was understood that the one male cousin would be the heir to the uncle's fortune.

It also, to my prejudiced mind, tinged his smile, as slipping by me, he remarked:

"I think I had the good fortune to amuse him tonight. He is asleep now and I could sit by his side as he sleeps, if I wish."

I had no answer for this beyond a slight nod, at which, with an air of indifference, he uttered a short good-night and flew past me down the stairs.

"He has won some unexpected boon from Uncle," I muttered in disgust as the door of his study closed. "Is it fortune? Is it Orpha?" I could bear the loss of the first. But Orpha's fate was sealed for me. I would struggle with every power with which I had been endowed. I would—

But here I entered the room and coming under the direct influence of the masterly portraiture of her who was so dear to me, better feelings prevailed.

To see her happy should and must be my chief aim in life. I was with myself, would nature have it that I came to know it, then it would be time for me to exert my powers and hold to my own in face of all opposition. But her heart was truly and irrevocably his, then my very love should lead me to step aside and leave them in each other. For that would be their right and one with which it would be presumptuous in me to meddle.

The light which I had been told to extinguish was near my uncle's hand as he lay in bed.

Seeing that he was, as Edgar said, peacefully asleep, I carefully pulled the chain attached to the flaming bulb.

Instantly the common-places of life vanished and the room was given over to mystery and magic. All that was gaily or simply plain to the view was gone, for wherever there was light there were also shadows, and shadows of that shifting and half-revealing kind which can only be gotten by the fitful leaping of a few expiring flames on a hearth-stone.

Uncle's fire never went out. Night or day there was always a blaze. It was his company, he said, and never more so than when he was in the small hours with the moon shut out and silence through all the house. It would be my task before I left him for the night to pile on fresh fuel and put up the screen, which being made of glass, allowed the full play of the dancing flames to be seen.

Revering in the mystic sight, I drew up a chair and sat before Orpha's portrait. Edgar was below stairs and doubtless in her company. Why, then, should I not have my hour with her here? The beauty of her pictured countenance which was apparent enough by day, was well high unearthly in the soft orange glow which veiled the screen of her hair and heightened the expression of eye and lip, only to leave them again in mystery as the flame died down and the shadows fell.

I could talk to her thus, and as I sat there looking and longing, words fell from my lips which happily there was no one to hear. It was my hour of delight snatched in an unguarded hour from the hands of Fate.

She herself might never listen, but this semblance of her face could not choose but do so. In this presence I could urge my plea and exhaust myself in loving speeches, and no displeasure could she show and even at times must smile as the shadows again shifted. It was a hollow amends for many a weary hour in which I got nothing but the same sweet sorrow of passion. I have to all about her. But a man welcomes dream food if he can get no other and for a full hour I sat there talking to my love and catching from time to time my presumed lover's faint whispers in response which were for no other ears than mine.

At last, fancy prevailed utterly, and rising, I flung out my arms in impossible longing towards her image, when, simultaneously with this action I felt my attention drawn irresistibly aside and my head turned slowly and without my volition more and more away from her, as if in response to some call at my back which I felt forced to heed.

Yet I had heard no sound and had no real expectation of seeing any one behind me unless it was my uncle who had wakened and needed me.
